Descriptions of the courses the above men will offer:

Comparative Government

A study of significant characteristics, problems, and tendencies of modern governments, with emphasis on the English and American systems. Topics to be given special attention include: the nature of constitutions and constitutional development; the workings of unitary and federal systems; presidential and cabinet government; civil service and the problem of bureaucracy; the growth of administrative legislation and justice; theories and problems of representatives; tendencies of electoral systems; legislative methods and procedures; problems of centralization and decentralization; grants-in-aid; problems of judicial organization and procedure. A considerable amount of general reading will be expected, but the meetings of the class will be devoted principally to discussions of selected problems, based in part on brief reports upon special inquiries carried on by individual members. Constant effort will be made to interpret governmental affairs in the light of contemporary social and economic conditions, and also of current political thought. Professor Frederic A. Ogg. Second semester. Two periods a week.

Far Eastern Government and Politics

In this course, considerable attention will be given to the historical back-ground of the present-day Far Eastern situation, especially since the opening of active relations with Western states and peoples in the middle part of the nineteenth century. In the main, however, the course will consist of a study of (a) the political institutions, problems, and tendencies of contemporary China and Japan, (b) the recent and present international relations of the Far East, and of the Pacific area generally, and (c) specific topics such as extraterritoriality, leases and spheres, open door, railroad diplomacy, foreign loans, industrialization, population problems, Manchuria as a theater of international rivalries, sea power, and the policies of the United States and other powers in relation to China. General reading and research, with lectures, reports, and discussions. Professor Frederic A. Ogg. Second semester. Two periods a week.

Current Problems in the Philosophy of Religion

A survey of the recent developments in the psychology, the comparative study and the history of religion with special reference to the problems arising therefrom, to be followed by an intensive investigation and an attempted solution of these problems, in connection with the formulation of a philosophy of religion in which these solutions should be embraced in a logical and coherent system. Dr. Weaver. Two periods a week. First and second semesters.

Sales Management

The policies, operation, and control of the marketing activities of manufacturing organizations: policies as they affect the company, its products and their market; operation and coordination of the selling, credit, and delivery functions, giving special attention to (1) personal selling, advertising, and sales promotion and (2) salesmen, their hiring, training, compensation, and supervision; control of merchandise, the salesmen, and the sales departments. Dr. White. Two periods a week. First semester.

Wholesale Management

The position of the wholesaler in the distribution of different classes of consumer and industrial merchandise; types of wholesale distributors such as service, cash and carry, and truck wholesalers, brokers, cooperative chains, manufacturers' agents; functions performed; cost of performing these functions to the manufacturer, retailer, consumer; policies relative to such questions as national advertising, resale price maintenance, private brands, free goods, missionary salesmen; operation and control of the different divisions of a wholesale house such as buying, warehousing, selling, and delivery; the future development of distribution as it affects wholesaling. Dr. White. Two periods a week. Second semester.

Public Finance

A survey and analysis of the principles employed by governments, national, state and local, in their financial operations; the growth and economic effects of public expenditures; a study of revenue sources with an analysis of various types of taxes, such as general property taxes, income taxes, inheritance taxes and others, and their economic advantages and disadvantages; the growth and legitimate use of public borrowing. Dr. Moore. Two periods a week. First semester.
